

Certificate for Domestic Installer's Training (Part P)

Part P Defined Scope

Part P is a relatively new addition to building regulations. Its creation is intended to regulate the installation of electrical work so that it can be confirmed as being safe – either by Building Control or by a 'Competent Person'. Part P has been introduced in order to reduce the number of deaths, injuries and fires caused by faulty electrical installations and make life harder for cowboys to leave electrical installations in an unsafe condition. Individuals who complete our five day course, which consists of theory and practical training and assessments will be able to self certify their own domestic minor electrical work.

At Get Training we not only deliver training in preparation for assessments, we fully prepare our candidates for real life scenarios to ensure they feel confident to utilise their Part P qualification when on site.

Our fully equipped dedicated Part P Training Centre ensures candidates feel comfortable in their training environment with access to test equipment and reading materials throughout their course.

Candidates are also able to purchase test equipment and training materials from Get Training at extremely competitive prices!

Benefits

If you or your company carry out domestic electrical work, successful completion of the Part P course will mean you save time and money. 'Competent Persons' do not need to submit building notices or have their work inspected by Building Control, which means the work can begin in your own time and no fees are incurred when it's finished.

As soon as you complete the course successfully, you can simply register with your preferred registration body and begin to self-certify your own minor electrical work. You'll get more business and you'll be able to charge higher prices for the service you're providing.

Does It Apply to Me?

Applicants are not required to hold any electrical qualifications or knowledge to complete the Domestic Installer's Training course; it is particularly aimed at kitchen fitters, bathroom fitters and heating engineers who want to be able to self-certify that their work complies with Building Regulations.
